ACTORS IN THE
INTERNATIONAL SYSTEM

GHANA IN THE GLOBAL SYSTEM

Ghana in the Community of Nations

Introduction

The section aims to assess actors in the international system. It looks at different actors in the global system as divided into two main groups: the state and the non-state actors. The discussion in this section is that the international system is increasingly shaped by social forces and non-state actors. It seems that states alone cannot handle issues that arise but rather need the joint efforts of individuals, groups, and coalitions. For a better understanding of the lessons, different interactive methods have been used.

By the end of the section, learners will have an improved understanding of the values of patriotism, loyalty, fairness, and commitment as well as 21st century skills, such as communication skills, leadership, and critical thinking skills. The themes covered by the section are state and non-state actors in the international system and a Recap of Year 1 learning.

By the end of this section, you should be able to:

- Identify and explain state and non-state actors in the international system
- Revision and recap

Key Idea

- Countries depend on each other for mutual benefits through individuals, groups and institutions.

MEANINGS AND TYPES OF ACTORS IN THE INTERNATIONAL SYSTEM

The international system is a set of relationships among units, states and non-state actors structured according to certain rules and patterns of interaction which may be direct or indirect. Several individuals, groups and institutions' actions and activities shape the global system in a meaningful and active way. These individuals, groups and institutions are collectively known as actors and are generally put into two groups referred to as state and non-state actors.

State Actors

State actors are individuals and institutions that act on behalf of states/countries. State actors set objectives which seek to address the challenges and protect the well-being of current and future generations. State actors usually derive authority from constitutional sources or other legal sources. Examples are the executive (President, Foreign Minister), the legislature, intelligence/security agencies/the civil bureaucracy.

Fig. 5.1: ECOWAS heads of state

Non-state Actors

Non-state actors are individuals and organisations who act on behalf of themselves, their members or their interest groups. They do not speak on behalf of the state but can influence the formulation of foreign policy decisions of governments. Examples include powerful individuals in Ghana such as Joseph Agyepong founder of Jospong Group of Companies dealing in waste management, construction and technology, Ibrahim Mahama founder of Engineers and Planners, a leading construction and mining company, and internationally individuals such as Bill Gates, as well as non-profit organisations, multinational corporations, and labour unions.

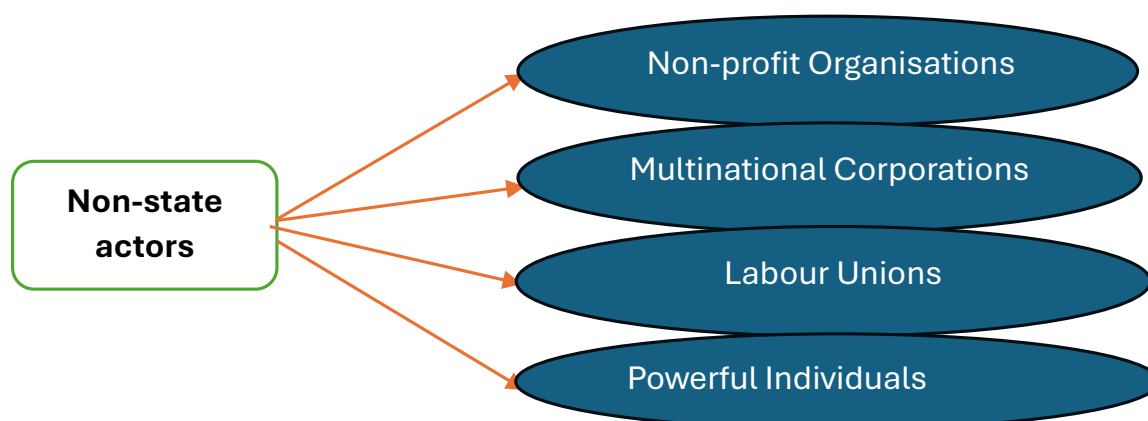

Fig. 5.2: Examples of Non-State Actors

National State Actors

National state actors in the international system are the Government Ministers of all countries, with the President/Prime Minister and Foreign Minister/Secretary being the most important for international relations.

International State Actors

They are normally known as international governmental organisations (IGOs) and are formed by two or more sovereign states with specific objectives. They are also called inter-governmental organisations and may be global, regional or sub-regional. Examples of global IGOs are the United Nations and the International Monetary Fund. Regional IGOs include the African Union and the European Union. Examples of sub-regional IGOs are the Economic Community of West African States and the Southern Africa Development Community.

National Non-state Actors

These refer to domestic individuals, groups and institutions that shape a country's decision on the international scene/stage. Examples include think tanks (e.g., the Institute of Economic Affairs (IEA)/ the Centre for Democratic Development-Ghana; Labour Unions (e.g., the Ghana National Association of Teachers, the Ghana Union of Traders Association) and Interest Groups (e.g., Occupy Ghana)

International Non-state Actors

International non-state actors also called Non-Governmental Organisations (NGOs) are private and formed by individuals or a group of individuals whose operations cut across national borders. It must be acknowledged that they play diverse functions/roles in states or governments. Examples of these actors are Multinational Corporations (Coca-Cola, General Motors, Tullow Oil), Amnesty International, World Vision, the World Muslim Council, and terrorist organisations, e.g., Al Qaeda.

Influential Personalities

These are individuals, often respected statesmen or stateswomen, who have distinguished themselves in one way or another. They are usually called upon to influence the decisions of state actors because of the amount of respect they command internationally or their wealth. Examples (past and present) include Bill Gates, Warren Buffet, Kofi Annan, Nelson Mandela and Oprah Winfrey.

Role of State Actors

State Actors play very important roles in international relations, here are some of the roles:

1. Formulation and implementation of foreign policy decisions

State actors/officials formulate alternative policies to deal with foreign policy issues. In other words, state actors take decisions, steps and measures concerning other states and international bodies. The foreign policy decisions by state actors are varied and they include political, social, economic, security/military. Since independence, the state actors involved in foreign policy formulation in Ghana include the President, Parliament, and Council of State among others. [NB: Year Two Learner Material will give a detailed explanation of this topic]. State actors pursue foreign policy to promote such values as democracy, human rights, and attraction of foreign direct investment (FDI). For the implementation of foreign policies, state actors take seriously into consideration the allocation of resources in terms of budget, personnel, and diplomatic efforts.

2. Protect the interest of their citizens in the international system.

State actors also pursue what may be referred to as the ‘common good’, meaning protecting the welfare of its citizens in the international system. In this regard, states engage in various activities such as negotiating with other states to reach agreements and for peaceful resolution of conflicts and participating in global discussions or forums such as the United Nations (UN) and the World Health Organisation (WHO). Further, states reach trade agreements, impose sanctions and provide foreign aid to promote their economic interests.

3. Ensure stability of the global system.

Stability and peace of the international system is very important for the growth and development of states. However, ensuring stability is the responsibility of several actors and institutions. Concerning global stability, state actors engage in various efforts including but not limited to open communication channels with other states to prevent misunderstanding, and promote peaceful resolution of conflicts through mediation, peacekeeping and promotion of trade and investment.

Role of Non-state Actors

The contemporary international system comprises several states, groups, and institutions whose daily decisions and actions affect those who live within the international system. However, due to the complexity of the global system, state actors have ceased to be the only recognised actors. Non-state actors also play a very important role in the international system.

1. Influence policy decision-making of national governments

Non-state actors influence the formulation of foreign policy decisions of national government. Their activities may be influential when foreign policy is being formulated. They try to lobby government ministers, legislators and civil servants who are advisors to politicians.

2. Creation of job opportunities

Non-state actors representing multi-national Corporations (MNCs) and corporations are influential in the international system partly because of their role in employment and job creation. MNCs which are companies that have their origin in one country with subsidiaries in several other countries establish sole or joint ventures in the areas of manufacturing, logistics and the services sectors. MNCs through their foreign direct investment (FDI) are very instrumental in the creation of employment and provision of social infrastructure services in both the host country and country of origin. As such, many developing countries are putting measures in place to attract them (FDI).

3. Transfers of technology

Non-state actors in the international system also transfer technology and provide requisite technical training and capacity building to governments and other organisations. They share information on research and innovations from one sector to another, mostly from more developed countries to less advanced countries or organisations. The transfer of technology will in the long run boost their economies and enhance human development.

Activity 5.1: Actors in the International System

1. Using the school or community library, research and write a two-page paper on the meaning and type of actors in the international system. The first page should discuss state actors, and the second page should outline non-state actors. Compare your answers with peers and prepare a presentation.
2. Research and write the differences and similarities between international state actors and international non-state actors. The table below gives examples to help you get started.

Differences

International state actors	International non-state actors
State actors are accountable to their citizens as sovereignty resides in the citizens.	Non-state actors may be accountable to their members or donors.

Similarities

International State Actors	International Non-state Actors
They both aim to promote the interest of their members being political, economic, social and cultural.

INTERNATIONAL GOVERNMENTAL ACTORS (ECONOMIC COMMUNITY OF WEST AFRICAN STATES - ECOWAS)

Background/Origin

The Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) emerged at a Treaty in Lagos on 28th May 1975. It was originally inaugurated primarily as an economic cooperation and integration organisation after the challenges of the 1970s due to the oil crisis of 1973. It is an organisation that cut across all colonial boundaries, consisting of Anglophone (Ghana, Nigeria, the Gambia, Liberia and Sierra Leone), Francophone (Benin, Burkina Faso, Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea, Mali, Niger, Sénégal and Togo) and Lusophone (Cabo Verde and Guinea-Bissau) countries of the sub-region. However, in the aftermath of several domestic violent conflicts in the sub-region, ECOWAS has assumed a more political role.

NB: Mauritania, a signatory to the Treaty of Lagos withdrew its membership of ECOWAS in 2002

Fig. 5.3: ECOWAS member states

Aims/Purpose of ECOWAS

1. Promote economic integration and development among member states
2. Eliminate trade restrictions/barriers
3. Promote free movement of persons, goods and services among member states
4. Harmonise the economic and monetary policies of member states
5. Create a fund for cooperation, compensation, and development among member states.

Achievements of ECOWAS

The Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) has made several achievements since it was established in 1975. Here are some of the achievements listed below:

1. Promotion of democratic governance

Through monitoring, support and evaluation, ECOWAS has ensured free and fair elections in the region. It encourages a multi-party system and inclusiveness that promotes political participation, transparency, accountability, human rights, and the rule of law.

2. Conflict prevention, management and resolution

ECOWAS has also been successful in conflict prevention, management, and resolution through peacekeeping operations. It identifies potential conflict areas and quickly takes active measures to prevent them from happening or spreading. Conflict management usually means putting plans in place to contain and reduce their effects by working towards a peaceful resolution of conflicts while also addressing the underlying causes.

3. Promotion of free movement of persons

It has facilitated the free movement of citizens of member states within the region by removing barriers to migration like visas and border controls and fostering cooperation on border security and management. This brought about an increase in economic opportunities and labour mobility, competition and innovation, better response to market needs and enhanced regional trade and investment.

4. Response to humanitarian emergencies

Another achievement of ECOWAS has been its ability to respond to emergencies like natural disasters such as floods, droughts, and wildfires. Other assistance in health emergencies include in response to diseases like Ebola and the COVID-19 pandemic. In addition, there have been interventions during ethnic conflicts and violence and the attendant refugee crises. In such emergencies, ECOWAS provides humanitarian services such as disaster risk reduction and management, provision of food and nutrition programmes, health and medical supplies, and shelter.

5. Trade liberalisation

ECOWAS has achieved great progress in trade liberalisation through the establishment of a common external tariff, implementation of the ECOWAS trade liberalisation scheme, creation of a regional customs union, implementation of the ECOWAS Common Market Protocol and many other interventions in the region. These actions by ECOWAS led to increased intra-regional trade, improved market access for goods and services, enhanced economic competitiveness, simplified trade procedures reduced costs and increased investment and economic growth.

Fig. 5.4b: Image of a military leader of Burkina Faso

Challenges for ECOWAS

The Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) faces several challenges ranging from political, economic and social. Below are some of the challenges that the organisation faced.

1. Political instability

One major challenge hindering ECOWAS from successfully achieving its goals is political instability. The ECOWAS sub-region has been experiencing issues of intra-state ethnic conflicts and civil wars. For example, Liberia and Sierra Leone have witnessed several periods of civil unrest. These and many others make it difficult for ECOWAS to promote regional integration and economic cooperation. Political instability in member countries leads to cross-border issues such as refugee flows, and security threats to citizens. The hosting of the refugees puts an extra financial burden on the organisation and may also result in the inability to implement regional policies.

2. Undemocratic regimes and military coup d'états

The ECOWAS sub-region has experienced several authoritarian and military regimes, with political leaders who do not subscribe to the principles of democracy and the rule of law. In these cases, the governance system has been devoid of citizen participation and involvement. The undemocratic system usually led to protests violence and military involvement in the administration of the state. Many countries in the sub-region have experienced coup d'états , meaning military takeover. For instance, within a period of three years (2021-2023), ECOWAS saw military coups in three different member states namely Burkina Faso, Mali, and Niger. The regimes mostly do not practice democratic principles such as respect for the rights of individuals and the rule of law.

3. Financial constraints

The inability of member states to pay dues and honour other financial obligations affects the activities of the organisation. The fiscal difficulties result in the organisation's inability to implement regional projects such as roads, electricity, and security operations.

4. Domestic and international terrorism

The West Africa sub-region has the most porous border regimes in the world with the borderlands covering several ungoverned spaces where terrorist groups operate. This has created opportunities for militant groups such as Boko Haram, al-Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM) and Islamic State (ISIS) activities causing widespread insecurity and humanitarian crises.

Fig. 5.5: Terrorist groups

5. Lack of institutional capacity building

Many ECOWAS member states have weak institutions (Customs, Taxation, Immigration) and struggle with effective governance. This lack of strong institutions makes it hard to carry out policies and reforms needed for regional cooperation and economic growth.

Activity 5.2: ECOWAS

1. In three sentences, write the meaning, aims and works of ECOWAS. Share your responses with a friend for a class discussion. Visit <https://www.ecowas.int/> for more information.
2. Identify and label the countries that make up the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS). You may go to https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=lGm_vvxS4Eg to use the map.
3. Research on the impacts of ECOWAS on the development of the Ghanaian state and create an informative poster that raises awareness and paste it around the classroom. Think about what issues can unite and divide Ghana and other ECOWAS member states. Your teacher might chair a debate on the points raised during the class discussions. Go to <http://google.com> to search and read the most recent news story.
4. Using library or online resources, research the top three achievements of ECOWAS. Identify which of the five ECOWAS aims the achievements contribute to. What challenges might ECOWAS face in trying to achieve these successes? Present your findings using the format below.

INTERNATIONAL GOVERNMENTAL ACTORS - AFRICAN UNION (AU)

Background/Origin

The African Union (AU) has its roots in the Manchester Pan-Africanism Congress of 1946. To promote unity, equity and economic welfare of the African people, the now-defunct Organisation of African Unity (OAU), was established by the then-independent states of Africa on 25 May 1963. In July 2002, the OAU was relaunched in Durban, South Africa, and replaced by the African Union (AU). It focuses primarily on achieving political integration. Thus, the AU's integration agenda is driven by efforts towards socio-economic cooperation with emphasis on democratisation, human rights, good governance, and the rule of law as contained in the Agenda 2063 (AU 2063).

Headquartered in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, the AU currently covers a population of over 1.3 billion. Today, the 54 African countries represent over a quarter of the United Nation's total of 193 member states. The founding treaty called the Constitutive Act of the African Union, provides for ten organs namely: the Assembly of Heads of State and Government (AHSO), the Executive Council, the Security and Peace Council, the Pan-African Parliament (PAP), the African Court of Justice and Human Rights, the Commission, the Permanent Representatives Committee, the Specialised Technical Committees (STCs), the Economic, Social and Cultural Council (ECOSOCC), and the Financial Institutions.

Fig. 5.6a: African Continent Flags Fig. 5.6b: Ordinary Session of the AU, Addis Ababa.

Aims/Purpose of AU

1. To promote peace, security, and stability of the African continent
2. To promote democratic principles and good governance within member states
3. To defend the sovereignty, territorial integrity, and independence of African states.
4. Promote human rights per the African Charter on Human and Peoples Rights and other relevant instruments.
5. To promote and defend Africa's position on important issues in the global system among others.

Agenda 2063: The Africa We Want

Agenda 2063 (AU 2063) is a blueprint or long-term plan the African Union (AU) adopted to define and structure the continent's sustainable growth and development. The AU aims at restoring peace and stability and promotes rapid development through the full involvement of the private and public sectors. Agenda 2063 sets out a 50-year development framework which requires AU member states to integrate it into their national development plans in a three-phase-based approach. Agenda 2063 is an attempt by African leaders to use home-grown approaches to the development challenges facing the continent—the use of African solutions to African problems. Agenda 2063 has seven aspirations with 39 priority areas.

Goals and Aspirations of Agenda 2063

1. A prosperous Africa based on inclusive growth and sustainable development
2. An integrated continent, politically united and based on the ideals of Pan-Africanism
3. An Africa of good governance, democracy, respect for human rights, justice, and the rule of law.
4. An Africa with a strong cultural identity, common heritage, shared values, and ethics
5. An Africa whose development is people-driven, relying on the potential of African people, especially its women and youth and caring for children among others.

Achievements of AU

1. Promotion of democracy and good governance

One of the achievements of the AU/OAU since its inception is seeing the transition of most African countries under authority/military rule to civilian administration. In the early 1990s, many states in Africa moved to create some form of multiparty democracy. The AU has been against the military takeover of the reins of government. The AU member States have acknowledged the relation between democracy, rule of law and economic development under the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD) and the Africa Peer Review Mechanism (APRM). NEPAD has the idea of promoting and protecting democracy and human rights by developing standards of accountability and transparency in their respective countries and regions.

2. Conflict prevention, resolution, and peacekeeping operations

The African Union has also engaged in human rights protection and peacebuilding under what is commonly referred to as the African-led peace support operations. The organisation has deployed troops to war-torn countries since its establishment in 2002. The African continent has been beset by several civil wars and intra-state conflicts with women, children, and youth suffering from the impacts of these wars. To protect civilians, the AU since its establishment has been involved in more than thirty different peacekeeping operations in over 20 countries. These peacekeeping operations include the Democratic Republic of Congo, Burundi, Comoros, Sudan (Darfur) and Mali. The AU is currently supporting peacekeeping efforts in Somalia

(African Union Transition Mission in Somalia) and the Central Africa Republic (African Union Military Observer Mission to the Central African Republic).

3. Trade and investments

The African Union promotes trade and investment as opposed to the previous OAU which was primarily concerned with the issue of decolonisation. The AU has launched several investment initiatives such as NEPAD which detailed tackling problems of poverty, illiteracy, gender inequality, and infant and child mortality. Another impact of the NEPAD initiative is the deployment and use of ICT in education (e-school project) and other service delivery. Current trade and investment policies are the African Continental Free Trade Area (AfCFTA) and Agenda 2063. These programmes have attracted investment and increased inter-regional trade or intra-African trade. This has attracted private capital into several African states with the net effect of job creation and improvement in the economic well-being of the citizenry.

4. Economic performance

Another landmark achievement of the African Union is the African Continental Free Trade Area (AfCFTA). The AU focuses on promoting regional integration and African unity through socio-economic integration. It set up the AfCFTA as the most comprehensive continental trade arrangement to solve the low trade among African countries. It seeks to create a single market for goods and services and movement across borders. Trading activities under AfCFTA began in 2021, with the headquarters in Accra, Ghana.

Challenges for the African Union (AU)

1. Political instability

One of the most discouraging problems hindering the effort of the African Union in integrating the continent towards developmental transformation is intra-state and inter-state conflicts. However, the continental body or member-states cannot commit meaningfully to conflict prevention and resolution without outside assistance. More than forty wars have been fought on the African continent since independence in places such as Angola, Mozambique, Liberia, Sierra Leone, Sudan, Côte d'Ivoire, and Burundi. The economic cost and the human toll have been devastating. Whole states have collapsed, infrastructures have been destroyed, and millions of people have become refugees. Intercommunal violence also hurts both democracy and development in Africa. Psychological trauma is also substantial given the violence, rape, and the use of children as soldiers. Violence, conflict and insecurity in the African continent continue to inhibit social and political progress and limit economic growth.

2. Involvement of the military in political affairs

After the attainment of political independence in most African states in the 1960s, it was hoped that economic growth and development would come to the majority of African citizens. However, this hope was dashed sooner than it had begun. Several individuals and groups took up arms against constitutionally elected governments. The changes in political administrations did not happen through the ballot. The majority of states in Africa, particularly West Africa have experienced military administrations with attendant counter coups and armed confrontations. Presently, the Niger, Burkina Faso and Mali have seen the military and the police into the national political space.

3. Financial constraints

AU faces the perennial problem of a financial deficit. AU member-states do not have the financial resources to implement their national development to improve the material well-being of their citizens. Most AU countries rely extensively on external donors for operational costs or activities. Member states are therefore unable to pay the dues and other financial obligations to support the activities of the AU.

4. Poverty and diseases

Political leaders in Africa have not been able to improve the standard of living of the majority the citizens through better housing, good prices for agricultural products and other economic activities, better transportation and marketing of rural produce, education as a means of social mobility, an adequate supply of clean water, electricity and health-care facilities. The economy of most African states is not diversified resulting in high unemployment, particularly among the urban youth. In addition, the continent has experienced several diseases. The spread of Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS), (which is caused by the Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV)), Ebola and the COVID-19 pandemic. They kill adults in the prime of their working lives, destroy the workforce, send families into poverty, and orphans millions.

5. Human trafficking and arms trade

The protection of human rights is provided as a major objective for the AU. However, the African continent has seen new threats such as migrant smuggling and human trafficking. Many Africans are 'recruited' through force, threats and other coercion, then transported for exploitation such as prostitution mostly in Europe and the Middle East. It is a form of modern-day slavery with victims from countries such as Nigeria, Senegal Mali, Central Africa Republic, and Equatorial Guinea. States and governments have the responsibility for the prevention, protection, and prosecution of offenders of, human trafficking. However, many have weak laws to deal with the issue. The AU and its institutions have not been able to impose a duty on states to ensure that any person whose rights or freedoms have been violated shall have an effective remedy or cooperate with the law enforcement authorities to prosecute and punish traffickers. In addition, there is the trafficking of small arms and light weapons, trans-border crime, piracy and trade in narcotics which pose serious challenges to stability on the continent.

INTERNATIONAL GOVERNMENTAL ACTORS (THE UNITED NATIONS ORGANISATION (UN OR UNO))

Background/Origin

To reduce the risk of conflicts and stamp out mass violence after World War II, Britain, the United States, China and the Soviet Union met in Moscow in 1943 and pledged their support to cooperate through the formation of an organisation dedicated and committed to the promotion of global peace. The discussion to restore peace continued to Dumbarton Oaks, Washington, DC, in 1944 and at Yalta in February 1945. The United Nations (UN) decision-making structure was designed in Dumbarton Oaks. Finally, on 26 June 1945 in San Francisco, fifty-one (51) states signed the United Nations Charter to maintain a new international order, peace and security.

Today, the UN comprises 193 sovereign countries called member states that have agreed on a set of rules laid out in the UN Charter. Thus, the Charter is an international treaty that spells out the rights and duties of UN member states, as part of the world community.

The structure/main organs of the United Nations are the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC), the Trusteeship Council, the International Court of Justice and the Secretariat. The Trusteeship Council became non-operational after the decolonisation process. The functions of these organs are different.

The General Assembly is where each of the 193 member states, no matter how small, have an equal vote on its resolutions. In other words, the General Assembly is the forum where all member states are represented. The Secretariat is the operational administrative body that runs the activities of the UN. It is headed by a Secretary-General, who is appointed by the General Assembly on the recommendation of the Security Council for a renewable five-year term. The Security Council is a deliberative body composed of five permanent and ten non-permanent member states on a rotational basis. The organisation depends largely on the 'goodwill' of the United States, France, the United Kingdom, Russia and China. They make up the five Permanent Members of the Security Council and possess the right of Veto. The Security Council has wide powers for the protection and maintenance of global peace and security. The verdict of the five Permanent Members is binding on all its member states.

Fig. 5.9: Flag of the UN

Aims and Purpose of the United Nations

1. Preservation of the international peace and collective security
2. Promotion of human rights and respect for international law
3. Promote social and economic progress among others.

Achievements of the United Nations

Assessments of the UN's performance over time vary widely. Individuals, groups and institutions have praised the world body's complex work it has undertaken since its establishment in 1945. These are some of the significant achievements of the UN.

1. Peacebuilding and peacekeeping operations

Since the end of the Second World War in 1945, the United Nations has engaged in several peace operations such as peacekeeping, peacebuilding and enforcement to ease the effects of wars and civil conflicts around the world. The UN keeps peace around the world using military and police personnel from many member states, who wear blue helmets to show that they are representing the UN. The men and women from the UN disband groups and combatants involved in the conflicts and monitor peace agreements. Examples of the UN peacekeeping activities to restore stability include its observer Mission in El Salvador (1991), the Congo (1960-64), Bosnia and Herzegovina (1995), Lebanon (2000), and Sudan (2007).

Fig. 5.10: UN Oct. 2017 Photo: Permanent Mission of Ghana to the UN

Fig. 5.11: Images of the UN peacekeeping mission

2. Provision of humanitarian assistance

Another achievement of the United Nations is alleviating the suffering of many people through its humanitarian efforts. Wars and conflicts have created the insecurity of hunger that affects millions of humans around the world. The UN through its specialised agencies like the World Health Organisation (WHO), UN Children’s Fund (UNICEF), World Food Programme (WFP), and UN High Commission for Refugees (UNHCR) have provided humanitarian and other assistance to poor populations such as refugees in troubled or affected parts of the world. This support has gone to sectors such as health, education, nutrition, and social welfare.

3. Support the decolonisation process

The UN has played a vital and rapid role in decolonization in Africa, Asia, and other parts of the world. After the end of the Second World War, the UN became more concerned with political and administrative change in countries still under colonial rule. The Trusteeship Council which is one of the six organs of the UN had the responsibility of ensuring ‘self-government’ for people under colonial rule. The deliberative organs of the UN such as the General Assembly were used to pressurise the European powers to grant independence and self-rule to countries in Africa and Asia as well as the support for elimination of apartheid in South Africa in the 1990s.

4. Promotion of democratic governance

The UN, in addition to the peace settlement, assists member states in charting a path towards a system of democratic governance. The UN sees the establishment of the rule of law as desirable after horrible wars and conflicts. Subsequently, since the 1990s, the UN has supported several countries to transition towards democracy. For example, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) promotes governance through institutional capacity building and advisory support for programmes and projects in democratic countries. In Ghana, the UNDP has helped the Electoral Commission through the training of electoral officials to build their capacity in electoral processes. Again, the UN recruits, trains, and deploys international observers to monitor elections. The support also takes the form of supervision and independent election monitoring such as the registration of voters and inspection of the voters' register; verification of results by sending observers to the collating centres by judging whether the voting process was fair and free.

5. Design strategic development plans.

Another achievement of the United Nations is the launch of development plans widely known as the global goals namely the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) and the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs). To ensure sustainable growth and development, the UN in September 2015 introduced the Sustainable Development Goals. The SDGs, which have 17 goals with 169 targets and 303 indicators are concerned with development that meets the needs of the present generation (the youth) without compromising the ability of the future generation to fulfil their own needs and destiny. The SDGs will end in 2030 to address the challenges all human beings face, in terms of such as the provision of clean water and sanitation, quality education and sustainable cities. Some of the special goals are SDG 1 on ending poverty in all forms, SDG 2 on zero hunger, SDG 3 on healthy lives and well-being, and SDG 4 on quality education. See activity 5.15 for the full list of the 17 goals or visit <https://ghana.un.org/en/sdgs>. In 2000, the MDGs were adopted by UN member states aimed to reduce poverty and inequality throughout the world and ended in 2015. It had eight (8) goals.

Challenges of the United Nations

Despite the successes achieved by the UN, there are areas where the organisation has experienced some failures. Below are some of the current challenges

1. Inadequate resources

The United Nations is financed mostly by taxpayers from a few donor countries. Most of the member states do not pay their dues and other financial obligations. The failure and inability of member states to pay their dues affect the resources needed for the organisation to undertake several of its programmes and activities around the world.

2. Persistence of wars/political instability

The effects of wars and civil conflicts on states are often obvious, with infrastructure damaged, economic activities interrupted, and the labour pool lost from injury and killing of people. However, the credibility of the United Nations has been challenged as it has failed to be proactive in most conflicts. The UN failed effectively to respond to mass murder in Somalia, Bosnia (Srebrenica) and Rwanda. Further, it failed to prevent the current Ukraine-Russia war and the crises in the Middle East particularly the Israel-Palestine conflict.

3. Nuclear arms proliferation

A more general line of criticism is against the UN's inability to save mankind from the threat of mass devastation. Weapons of Mass Destruction, which include the production of chemical and biological weapons could destabilise global peace and security in the 21st century. Signatories to the agreements not to produce weapons of mass destruction (Non-Proliferation Treaty) are secretly producing modern weapons and enhancing their military capacities. The major powers particularly Russia and China have failed to declare their stockpiles, a source of frustration for many non-nuclear weapon countries. Other countries producing wide weapons are North Korea, Israel, and Iran. These arms threaten global peace and security, and the UN has not been able to prevent, stop or punish producers of these nuclear weapons.
